Marine debris and microplastics are of major concern to the oceans and human health. Studies continue to show how microplastics are being spread throughout the food web and the alarming number of things microplastics can be found in, including: beer, tap water, and air pollution.

Where do all these microplastics come from and how can they be prevented? How does trash and pollution make its way to waterways and how can people help? What animals are impacted by plastic and what are the consequences on human health? These matters will be discussed and preventative measures will be explored.
